BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

We have received two new volumes of Ticknor & Fields's "Library Edition" of the "Waverley Novels," containing Rob Roy and Kenilscorth.

LITTLE DORRITT is published in Hurd & Houghton's Globe Edition of the Works of CHARLES Dialogues for Young Folks, by S. A. FROST, a Rupert Godwin, a sensational novel, by Miss BRADDON, are published by Dick & Fitzgerald.

A new edition of Rainbows for Children, ed-Hed by Mrs. L. Maria Child, and Grimm's Goblins, se-lected from the Household Stories" of the Brothers Okum, with colored illustrations from Chikshank's designs, are published by Ticknor & Fields.

We have received from Littell & Gay, the Sixth Volume of Littel's Living Age. Fourth Series, for the months of July, August, and September, containing the usual excellent selections from the best products of the periodical literature of Great Britain.

Hurd & Houghton have published the Sixth Part of Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, edited by Professor H. B. HACKETT, and EZRA ABBOT, extending from the title "David" to "Egypt." The superior mechanical execution of this edition is worthy of the high character

The American Law Review for October (Boston: Little, Brown, & Co.) among its articles of general baterest has an admirable biographical sketch of the late Thief Justice Shaw, of the Supreme Court of Massachu-setts. It pays a well-deserved tribute to the learning, wisdom, and integrity of that eminent jurist.

A new edition of The Code of Procedure of the State of New-York as amended to 1867, with all the amendments incorporated with the sections that have been changed, with the revised rules of all the Courts and a full analytical index, edited by John Townshend, ceq., is published by Baker, Voorhies, & Co.

The September number of Blackwood, repubbehed by the Leonard Scott Company, opens with an elaborate critical discussion of the popular English novels of the day. A readable paper entitled "La Physique Modern," gives a lucid analysis of a charming little treatise by M. Saigey on the modern scientific discoveries relating

The Third Series of Hymns of Faith and Hope, by Horatius Boner, D. D., published by Robert Carter & Brothers, will be welcome to the lovers of sacred peetry for the fervor of spirit and tender unction with which they celebrate the chief themes of evangelical piety. In addition to the original pieces which compose a large part of the contents of the volume, it contains a complete metrical version of the Psalms of David.

The Chemical News for October, reprinted by W. A. Townsend & Adams from the English edition, contains valuable articles on the "Utilization of Waste Products of Coal Gas," "Technical Education," "Losses of Saiphur in the Vitriol Manufacture," and an abundant variety of miscellaneous matter, forming an attractive and highly useful table of contents. It is announced by the New-York publishers that an arrangement has been publication, for the advance sheets of the work after the close of the current volume, and that the reprint will hereafter be issued with his full consent and sanction.

Harper & Brothers have brought out a Manwal of Physical Exercises, by WILLIAM WOOD, devoted to instruction in gymnastics, rowing, skating, fencing, ball-playing, and other athletic exercises which are at the foundation of "muscular Christianity." The anthorof the book is a professional teacher in that department of education, and although he disclaims any pretensions to literary practice or skill, has shown excellent ase in his treatment of the subject. His directions in regard to the care and preservation of health are in accordance with the most approved systems of hygiene, and are set forth in an intelligent and attractive way. The amateurs of methodical physical training, who happily are new found in every quarter will be glad to accept this volume as good authority on sanitary culture, as well so on the prevailing fashionable pastimes.

A new Dictionary of the English Language, on the quarto edition of Webster, and edited by WILLIAM A. WHEELER, is published by G. & C. Merriam. The volume is intended in some sort as a revision of the octhough it has been prepared on the same general plan, it is to be regarded rather as an abstract of the improved edition of the large Diconary, published in 1864. It aims to meet the wants of readers who wish to possess in a moderate compass the most complete exhibition of the meaning, pass the most complete exhibition of the meaning, pronunciation, and orthography of the words in the English language. With regard to the the English language, which have heretofore triculation.

CANDIDATES FOR ADMISSION embrace only a few limited classes of words, though clearly pointing out the way which naturally follows from the principles of Dr. Webster. In every instance, the form preferred has been sanctioned by the authority of distinguished English philologists, including such writers as Walker, and Bishop Lowth. The aid of pictorial illustrations has been liberally employed to elucidate the meaning of certain words, which represent Lamfliar objects of sight. In addition to the usual contral transfer of an English Dictionary, the values. aral valuable vocabularies, which greatly enhance its practical utility. It is brought out with great typographical neatness and accuracy, and in substantial and appropriate binding. As a manual of reference, it is eminently fitted for use in families and schools, though critileaf students of the language will find a more copious work indispensable for their purpose.

Principles of the Law of Contracts, by THERON METCALF (Hurd & Houghton), is a new treatise on a leading branch of legal science by an eminent Massachusetts jurist who has recently retired from the bench of the Supreme Judicial Court in that State. The work was originally prepared many years ago for the use of students in the author's office, and was subsequently published as a contribution to a prominent legal journal. The present edition has been revised and enlarged by references to reports and other authorities since the year 1828, but in other respects, it retains the original form of the work. Although the subject has been treated at ample length and with distinguished ability by Professor Parsons, and other American and English writers on jurisprudence, Judge Metcalf's treatise forms a valuable addition to our legal authorities, and cannot fail to be greeted with a respectful and kindly welcome by the sincere students of inw in the profession. Its author has devoted a long life to legal researches and decisions, doing honor to a post of eminence in a State where the office confers honor on the incumbent, and the possession of which is one of the most coveted titles to public renown, implying high qualities of character, and rare judicial accomplishments. The volume everywhere evinces the singular legal acumen, the subtle analysis of principles, the varied and profound learning, and the felicity of illustration, which identify the author in professional circles. The gravity of discussion which belongs to the theme is sometimes re-Meved by a certain quaintness of allusion, or the hint of a personal reminiscence, always refreshing in the arid pages of the law, of which an example is given in the following note on the one hundred and sixty-fourth page. "A suggestion may not be useless, in this connection, repecting the practice of putting books on the law of Nisi Prius (Builer, Espinasse, Selwyn) into the hands of students, in the early stages of their pupilage. The doctrines of the law, in these works, are set forth, in a great measure, with reference to the actions of which the compilers trent, and the rules of pleading applicable to those actions. But when (in former days) were students advised of this fact? When were they cautioned not to take, as the real truth of the matter, the elementary doctrine of the law, the positions laid down by these writers m reference to the forms of actions and of pleading? The writers themselves do not give this caution, and young students do not always distinguish between the body and the dress, the substance and the form. With regard to eading, nearly the whole doctrine treated of under the title of Assumpsit is founded on fictions, that no book which the writer has seen, has attempted to explain or been confused and misled as he has been by lack of knowledge on these points." We trust that this volume will not be the last production of the author's freedom from houorable judicial duties, but that he may still devote his lessure to the instruction and guidance of his younger brethren in the profession.
